ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

ESL Stories - Yours and Mine, The Life and Times of Lillian owes its existence to my adult ESL learners whose eager anticipation of each episode served as my inspiration.

I offer my appreciation to many Etobicoke ESL instructors for their enthusiastic response and positive feedback following the implementation of the stories, and to the workshop participants from other boards whose heartening evaluations encouraged me.

I gratefully acknowledge my friend and colleague, Mary Hall for her exemplary expertise in copy editing, typesetting and layout.

Finally, to my husband, Ross, my gratitude for his continuous loving support; to my daughter and son-in-law, Andrea and Richard, for their unwavering confidence; and to my grandchildren, Bradley and Kimberly, for their diversionary tactics.

I dedicate ESL Stories, in cherished memory of my mother, Lillian.

ESL Stories - Yours and Mine

Personal anecdotes or short stories about us or people we know make up an important part of our lives. Therefore, they are a valuable resource for ESL classes.

Stories involve the skills of listening, reading, speaking, and writing -- and many aspects of each of these. Because they can bring about the best in teaching, learning, and writing, they belong at the heart of language acquisition.

The bottom line in ESL is how much language and life skills our learners obtain in each session. The top priority is how we can best facilitate the learning process.

When I started to work in ESL twenty-two years ago, it seemed natural to relate personal anecdotes. This storytelling allowed my learners to practice asking questions to elicit information, to hear how verb tenses were used, to learn new vocabulary, and to retell events in sequence. The classes quickly and spontaneously made inferences about omissions from the stories, and regularly predicted what might have happened next. Animated discussions became a vital part of our time together. Grammar points were reinforced and understood from the context of the story. Follow-up skill activities were eagerly completed.

Many learners accepted the challenge of writing what they had heard and retained. It soon followed that they were writing their own personal anecdotes or even their life stories to share with the class. Their writing appeared to give them a sense of power over their second language.

I was delighted when my learners’ interest was captivated by incidents in my life, or someone I knew, or in the lives of other class members. The sharing of experiences requires a supportive community environment in an ESL classroom. As instructors, I believe that our role is to develop this atmosphere of trust. It surprised me at first to discover that people from all over the world were keenly interested in my personal stories -- sad, humorous, mundane, exciting, ridiculous. It amazed me that a copious amount of learning happened during the course of a story lesson. When the learners realized that the class and I were fascinated by their past experiences, present situations or future aspirations, they became zealous in their desire to write. They were grateful for the opportunity to share their customs and cultures, descriptions of family members, feelings about Canada, their vast store of memories.

Simply speaking, storytelling in ESL provides an exciting medium which allows the whole language process to take place. My inspiration to write some personal stories has come from the enthusiastic response of my learners. Their inspiration to write has come from the understanding that they have interesting and important things to share.

Real communication involves many interpersonal factors. Our stories -- theirs, yours, and mine -- connect us to our past, shape our present, and pave the way to our future.
GUIDELINES FOR USING ESL STORIES

1. Introduce the story with a discussion pertinent to the story line.

2. Use a grammar opener to introduce new vocabulary and reinforce question formation.

3. Tell one or two facts from the story.
   - Pause. This is learners’ cue to ask for information.
   - Continue this way until entire story has been elicited by the class.
   - Encourage learners’ inferences, predictions, and opinions during the telling.
   - Emphasize new vocabulary and idioms at the board.
   - Be dramatic, act out parts.

4. Have students retell in segments what they heard and retained. Work in pairs or groups.

5. Distribute copies of the story and related activities. Individual students read aloud “a sentence that tells...”

6. Do comprehension and inference questions, as many students as possible at the board.

7. Continue with related grammar activities.

8. Have students write a brief summary of the story.
Lillian’s Life Story

A. Introduction

Each of us can think of a person who has had a major influence on us. That special someone might be a parent or other relative, a friend, or a teacher.

Discuss with the class one person who has made a lasting impression on your life.

Today you will start to learn the extraordinary life story of a wonderful lady, the mother of an ESL teacher named Fran.

Your teacher will tell you the story before you read it. You will ask questions to find out information.

When your teacher pauses, that is your cue to ask for the facts.

Sometimes your teacher will ask, “What do you think happened next?”

You will try to predict the answer.

Before you hear each part of the story, you will do an opening exercise.

After you hear each segment, you will retell it as you take turns with a partner.

Then you will receive your copy of that part of the story.

Next, you will answer comprehension questions and do the follow-up exercises. Some of you will work at the board as we take up the answers.

Finally, you will write a brief summary of the section.
B. Vocabulary Study for Part 1

Here is a list of words you will hear and read in the first part of the story. How many of them do you already know? Read them carefully. Fill in the blanks in the sentences with a word from the list that explains the meaning of the word or words in bold print.

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 1

Lillian was not born in Canada. She came into the world on May 3, 1904, in New York City. She was the fourth of seven children born to an immigrant couple from Austria. Sol and Miriam must have come by ship to their new world with brave hopes for a better future.

However, poverty and tragedy awaited them. It is believed that Sol struggled courageously to earn a living for his young wife and growing family. A new baby arrived each year and there was no money for medical care.

Two sad events occurred in Lillian’s life when she was a very young child. When her mother, Miriam, died in childbirth around 1907, her distraught father, Sol, must have been desperate.

For some reason he decided to travel with his children to Toronto. To this day, no one knows why he made up his mind to do this. Did he have relatives in Toronto to help him?

Apparently he could find no help in Toronto, so he did a despicable thing. He left his children behind with their meager belongings in an orphanage. He abandoned them there. It is not known whether he intended to return for them because he was not heard from again. He never turned up at the orphanage. The children hoped that he would appear, but he had simply disappeared from their lives.
D. Comprehension and Inference Questions

1. Where and when was Lillian born?

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 2

The frightened, confused children huddled together in their bleak surroundings. They spoke and understood only German and a little English. As they waited and watched in vain for their father to return, the older ones tried to comfort the younger ones.

Two or three years passed, and the children became used to living in the orphanage. When the oldest sister and brother disappeared during that time, Lillian asked questions, but she was never told where the others had gone.

It was the custom in the early 1900s for farmers to visit orphanages and choose children to work on their farms. There was no Children’s Aid to protect those innocent little people.

A middle-aged farmer from northern Ontario travelled to Toronto by train. He and his wife were childless, so they needed help on their poor farm on the outskirts of a small village. The farmer looked the orphans over carefully. Finally, he chose a young lad about seven years old. His name was David and he was a year older than his sister, Lillian.

When the farmer and David were leaving the orphanage, Lillian cried out in despair. The brother who had protected her was going away! The farmer decided to take Lillian as well because she could help his wife in the farmhouse. The three youngest sisters and brothers pressed their faces against the orphanage window as they watched Lillian and David walk away with the stranger.

What would the future hold for Lillian and David? Would they ever see their siblings again?

Lillian's Life Story - Part 3

Lillian was about six years old, David was about seven, when they went to live on the farm. The farmer’s wife was not pleased when her husband arrived from Toronto with a boy -- and a girl. She did not like the idea of “another mouth to feed”. However, she soon learned that Lillian could work very hard for such a little girl.

Lillian and David were given chores to do every day. Lillian scrubbed the bare, wooden floors, washed the dishes, gathered the eggs, and swept the barn. David helped the farmer in the fields, milked the cows, and fed the chickens. About twice a month, they rode to the nearest village in a horse-drawn buggy. Most of their days were long and hard.

In the fall they walked to the one-room school about three kilometres from the farm. They loved school because there were other children and a pretty, young teacher. Lillian and David were very intelligent, so they caught on quickly. School was a wonderful new experience for them.

Just as they were learning to read and write and sing, the farmer’s wife became ill. Lillian had to stay home to do the housework. How disappointed she was! David continued at school for a short time, but the farmer decided to keep him home, too, in order to work in the fields.

It was the same each year. Lillian and David attended school for only a few weeks. There was too much work, so they had little time for education. Nonetheless, the two little orphans thought about their lessons as they laboured on the farm.

The years passed by slowly for Lillian and David. Sometimes they wondered about their father, brothers and sisters, but they rarely talked about them. In fact, they could scarcely remember what the others looked like.

If they had been allowed to attend school regularly, how different the children's lives could have been! Most of the time they spent on the farm doing the chores. Sometimes, on Sundays, they walked to the little country church with the farmer's wife. Lillian loved the hymns that she heard there. She memorized all the words and she sang every day while she worked away. It made her feel good to sing and she often made up songs in her head.

But David grew sullen and withdrawn. He was a very unhappy 14-year-old. There were times when he did not communicate, even with Lillian. Then one terrible morning, the farmer, his wife, and Lillian, looked all over for David. They could not find him. They searched every corner of the farm and called out to him. David had disappeared in the middle of the night!

Lillian was heartbroken. She was sad, she was angry! Her brother, the only person she had in the world, had abandoned her without a word of explanation. He had run off without her. Her sadness and anger turned to worry. Where had he gone? What would happen to him? Lillian wondered whether she would ever see him again. She kept her thoughts to herself and tried to live each day as it came.

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 5

The farmer was angry, and so was his wife. They asked each other why David had turned out to be such an ungrateful pup. Then they told Lillian that she would have to take over many of David’s jobs because her evil brother had let them down.

Lillian did not sing as much as she had before. David had deserted her. She was often worn out from all the extra work. At first she watched and waited for David or some word from him. But neither ever came.

Occasionally, Lillian thought about running away too, but it was different for a girl. She had no money, no family, no friends, no education, no knowledge of the outside world. Where would she go? What could she do? She remained on the farm, the weeks became months, the months became years. As time went on, the farm couple were not strong enough to look after the house, the animals, the garden. Lillian took care of everything.

Even though she did not have pretty things to wear, she always looked beautiful. When they went to church or into the village, everyone noticed her lovely, auburn hair and her charming smile.

Someone else noticed Lillian, too. The old bachelor who lived on a very poor farm a few kilometres down the road started to come to visit. He had never been sociable before, so why did he come now?

I think you will guess the reason for his visits. He wanted to marry Lillian! When he came to call, he talked to the farmer and his wife. He said more words than he had spoken in years. He asked if he could have Lillian. They said yes. Lillian was desperate. She did not want to marry this strange old man! She would not marry this strange old man! If only she had someone to turn to!
D. Comprehension and Inference Questions

1. How did the farm couple react to David’s disappearance?

2. Why didn’t Lillian sing as much as she had before?

3. What did she think about?

4. Why do you think running away was more difficult for a girl?

4. She thought to running away for find David.

5. The farm couple were too weak for look at their farm.

6. An old bachelor came for visit because he wanted to get married with her.
C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 6

Lillian had to make up her mind. She had to make a decision. If she stayed on the farm, the farm couple would talk her into marrying an ugly, old man three times her age. If she married him, she would have to look after both farms. If she ran off, where would she go?

At last she decided that she would leave, but she was frightened. She would have to plan carefully. Should she tell the people she lived with that she wanted to leave them? Would they try to force her to remain there? If she took off without any warning, would they come after her?

Poor Lillian! Her mind was filled with worry and fear. Her usual sunny smile disappeared once again from her lovely face. As she worked, she could think of nothing except her unfortunate circumstances.

One of Lillian’s many responsibilities was to take the large cans of cream to the train station in the village. Usually the farmer went with her and they returned home immediately. But one day he was too busy, and Lillian went by herself. This time she spoke to the friendly man at the station. They had a pleasant conversation about the weather, the crops, and the cost of shipping cream. The station man thought he would like to get to know Lillian better, but he didn’t let on.

When Lillian got back to the farm, the farmer’s wife angrily asked why she had taken so long. Lillian smiled for the first time in weeks. She mumbled an excuse to the woman, and went about doing her work. While she was preparing the evening meal, her thoughts wandered back to her trip to the station.
D. Comprehension and Inference Questions

1. Why was it necessary for Lillian to make a decision quite soon?

2. Why would Lillian end up looking after both farms if she married the neighbour?

3. What do you think were Lillian's biggest worries?

The following week Lillian again took the cream cans to the railway station by herself. There, the handsome, young man listened carefully as she talked about her situation on the farm. How impressed he was with her natural beauty and charming ways! He felt sorry for her and he offered to help. Lillian was delighted when he asked if he could come to call on her.

At the farmhouse later, an argument broke out between Lillian and the farm couple. Never before had Lillian disagreed with them, but suddenly she heard herself saying that she would not marry the old bachelor. Somehow she summoned the courage to tell them that the station man would be coming to visit. They shouted that Lillian must stop her foolishness. They would arrange a marriage between the old man and her within a few weeks!

George, the station man, arrived at the farm the next day. The farmer told him to leave right away because Lillian was promised to another man. This made George angry. He left, but he returned the next morning. The farmer’s wife chased him away with her broom.

Lillian was no longer allowed to transport the cream cans to the station. In fact, the farm couple kept a close eye on her, especially when she was toiling in the fields. George waited and watched for her, but she didn’t turn up. He realized that it was time for him to take action. Otherwise, it might be too late.

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 8

George drove along the dusty, gravel road to the farmhouse in his new Model A Ford. Lillian was hanging the washing on the clothesline. George liked the way the sun made Lillian’s hair shine.

The farmer’s wife was sitting quietly in her rocking chair in the yard. When she saw George, she called to her husband who was planting the garden.

Lillian noticed George, but she didn’t look directly at him. She was worried because she knew that they would send him away. Her thoughts were very confused.

George walked confidently across the yard. He politely asked if he could take Lillian for a drive in his new car. The old couple stubbornly refused his request. George became even more determined. He turned to Lillian and invited her to go with him. At first she ignored him. Then she shyly smiled. George’s heart melted. He looked intently at Lillian for a few minutes, and then he surprised everyone, even himself!

He said loudly that he wanted to marry Lillian! The old couple stared at him in astonishment. Lillian thought she was going to pass out.

Should she go with this man? She had only known him for a few weeks. His whole life was a mystery to her. Should she remain at the farm and marry the poor old bachelor? If she didn’t go with the station man, would she regret it later? Would she be safer if she stayed where she was? How could she possibly make up her mind in such a short time?

What do you think she did?

George went to the car and waited. Lillian slowly walked over to the farm couple. She told them clearly that she would like to go for a drive with George to discuss the amazing statement that he had just made. They responded by saying that if she left, she would never be allowed to return to the farm.

For a few minutes that seemed like hours, Lillian hesitated. Then she pleaded with them to give her a chance to get to know this man. They refused to change their minds. They wouldn't budge.

Lillian ran into the farmhouse, gathered up her few possessions, and with only a backward glance, she strode to the car, opened the door, got in and sat beside George. The car took off in a cloud of dust.

Later that day George and Lillian were married in the minister's house in the nearby village. Only four people were present at the simple ceremony.

Who were they?

It was a time of new beginnings, a time to take a chance on what the future might bring. Lillian never returned to the farm of her childhood.

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 11

For the first two months of their married life, Lillian and George stayed in a boarding house in the village. Lillian willingly helped the landlady with the cooking and cleaning.

George proudly took Lillian to his home in another village to meet his parents and his four unmarried brothers. (His oldest brother had been a casualty of World War I.) At first, Lillian’s mother-in-law was unpleasantly surprised that her son had married a ‘girl’ without good family connections. However, Lillian’s lovely personality soon endeared her to everyone.

The young couple rented their first home after George transferred to a town about 200 km. south of the village. Lillian loved the house with its wood fireplace and shiny hardwood floors. She had a beautiful home of her own!

George had a free pass on the railway, so he and his bride travelled to Toronto to buy their furniture and household items. It was with great excitement that they made their selection at Eaton’s. George was a generous, intelligent man, but he was also an impatient one. When the salesman said that the large order of goods would be shipped within two weeks, George replied that he wanted it sent that very day, or the order would be cancelled. George won out in the end. The furniture was transported by special delivery.

Lillian’s happiness escalated when their beautiful, healthy daughter, Elizabeth, was born a year later. George’s parents and brothers were ecstatic about having a baby girl in the family. Two years after Elizabeth’s arrival, George and Lillian became the proud mother and father of a baby son, Norman. Lillian was sure that she had a perfect life.

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 12

Lillian was a wonderful homemaker. She kept her home spotlessly clean; she became a cook of great renown. Her children were her pride and joy. She had a great desire to be the best mother in the world. George was sociable, fun-loving, and ambitious. He was also a restless person who loved a challenge. Because of his nature, the family moved several times. Lillian was always sorry to leave her friends behind, but she never questioned the decisions made by her husband. She made a new home and new friends wherever they lived.

George and Lillian had two bright, lively children. At that time a family with both a son and a daughter was called a ‘millionaire’s family’. However, a very joyful event occurred later. Their third child, Frances Lillian, arrived on the scene. If you know the rather immodest author of this story, you will realize why this girl’s birth was a truly ‘blessed event’!

Lillian always sang to her children. She loved to listen to the radio and she often made up her own lyrics to the songs she heard. Her melodious voice could be heard through her open kitchen windows.

When her children made excellent progress at school, Lillian was overwhelmed with pride. She studied their books, and with their help, devoured the knowledge that had been denied to her in her childhood. Her inborn ability surfaced as she became a self-educated person.

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 13

It is difficult to understand why bad things happen to good people. An unfortunate disability afflicted Lillian before she was middle-aged. She began to suffer from hearing loss, first in one ear and then in the other. As the condition worsened, Lillian said that she missed many things -- her children’s voices, her favourite radio programs, the cheerful sound of the birds in her backyard.

Several years later, a series of quite imperfect hearing aids and lip reading helped her to cope with her deafness and she tried desperately not to let her impairment hold her back.

Lillian was particularly fond of poetry. She read with enthusiasm. Her memory was remarkable; she gave outstanding recitations, not only of poems she read, but her own creations as well. She never wrote her poems down, but she did not miss a word when she related those beautiful verses to others.

Lillian enjoyed wearing bright colours and lots of costume jewellery. Can you understand why?

Did Lillian ever wonder about her brothers and sisters? She didn’t talk about her background to her children. They were curious and they often asked why they had no aunts, uncles or cousins on their mother’s side. Both George and Lillian gave vague answers to the questions. It was obvious that neither one wanted to discuss this issue. Nevertheless, when Lillian’s son, Norman was in his early twenties, he bought his first car. He made a decision to search for his mother’s relatives. The search was based on his limited knowledge of their roots.
D. Comprehension and Inference Questions

1. What is difficult to understand?

2. What impairment afflicted Lillian?

3. How did Lillian cope?

4. In what way was Lillian gifted?

5. What did Lillian enjoy?

6. Why were her children curious?

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 14

What facts did Norman know about his mother’s family? She was born in New York City; her mother died; her father abandoned the seven children. She lived on a farm during her childhood; her brother, David, ran away from the farm when he was in his early teens. Norman knew Lillian’s maiden name.

Was there a possibility that someone related to Lillian lived in New York City?

Norman told his mother about the incredible journey he was going to take. How did Lillian feel about her son’s desire to locate anyone connected to her past? She adamantly refused to admit any interest in his quest.

In 1952, Norman drove the three-day trip to New York City. After settling into a small, inexpensive motel, he obtained a copy of the large telephone directory. As he scanned the list of names, he excitedly saw his mother’s maiden name, and an address. The first name was also listed -- the name was David!

Norman wasted no time. He went to a pay phone immediately and dialled the number. When a man’s voice answered, Norman asked to speak to David. The voice replied, “This is David, who is calling, please?”

Lillian’s son was incredulous. Could this man possibly be the long-lost uncle, the person he was hoping to find?

Norman explained that he had come on a whim to New York City from Ontario. His words of explanation were spoken rapidly, but articulately.

David listened with disbelief to the younger man’s story.
D. Comprehension and Inference Questions

1. How did Lillian react to Norman's journey?

2. Why do you think she reacted this way?

3. What did Norman find in the New York City phone directory?

4. How did Norman speak to the man on the other end of the phone receiver?

C. Lillian’s Life Story - Part 15

David’s mind was filled with uncertainty. He asked questions to find out whether this person on the phone could be his nephew -- the son of the sister he had deserted a lifetime ago. Or was this man an impostor?

David and Norman finally agreed to meet at a restaurant later that same day. But how would they find each other in a crowd?

Norman entered the restaurant hesitantly. As he was looking around, a man came over to him. They stared at each other in disbelief. Then David said in a trembling voice, “I must be your uncle. You look exactly as I did thirty years ago. Please tell me about your mother.”

David led Norman to a quiet corner table. It is difficult to know who asked more questions or who talked more rapidly than the other. David wanted to know how many children Lillian had and what her life was like.

They were both exhausted from the emotional meeting. There was much to consider.

As Norman pondered the impact of his successful quest, David blurted out an astonishing statement. “Tomorrow I’d like you to meet my oldest sister, Felicia, your aunt who lives here in New York City.”

Norman was dumbfounded. He had inwardly doubted that he would find one of his mother’s relatives in New York City. The discovery of both an aunt and an uncle was miraculous! David picked him up the next day and took him to his apartment. Sitting in the living-room was an elegant lady who resembled his mother. Her name was Felicia, and she took to Norman immediately.

Felicia told Norman how she had been able to return to New York many years before. Her life had been quite different from Lillian’s. She had graduated from university and had a very successful career in education.

David told Norman about his roundabout travels to the city of his birth. He, too, had built a good life, but the road had not been smooth. Felicia and David reminisced about their first reunion in New York. There were still many unanswered questions in Norman’s mind.

The following summer Lillian’s sister and brother attended the wedding of their niece, Elizabeth, in a little village in Ontario.

Norman and Felicia became very close friends. Felicia became a small part of Lillian’s life. Norman took his mother to see her sister many times.

Lillian did not see David again.

An Epilogue of Love

from Fran

The greatest thing in the world is love, and it is that emotion that Lillian’s family celebrates - the love that enriched our lives, the love that makes us thankful for the great gift of mortal joy shared with her.

Lillian was our beloved matriarch. Her earthly sojourn personified family, friendship and faith. Nana, as she was fondly known to her loved ones, was intensely proud of, and close to her family. She unconditionally loved my sister, my brother and me. In her mind, there was nothing we could not accomplish. She loved the people we married, the eight grandchildren we produced, the people they married, and the fifteen great-grandchildren they gave her. Each of us knew that we held a special place in that beautiful, caring heart - each one precious, respected, accepted for our unique attributes. Her fondest hopes and dreams were realized as she observed us individually, and as a family. She proudly attended university graduations, showers and weddings, baptisms and confirmations.

Lillian’s little home was her castle as she welcomed everyone to visit and enjoy lively conversation, much laughter and her famous gourmet delicacies.

Lillian diligently strove through her home, family and friends to make the world a good, happy, peaceful place. She bequeathed to us a legacy of love and loyalty.

We remember her love, laughter, poetry, singing, her contagious enthusiasm for pretty things, bright colours, jewellery, and especially people.

The unwavering devotion shown to her by all her extended family was unsurpassed, according to the doctors and nurses at the hospital where she spent her final weeks.

And so we say, Godspeed, Brave Pilgrim - rest in peace and joy with all your loved ones, especially our precious Lori, our daughter who went before you. We know that love surrounds you there, as here.

Memories of Nana

from her granddaughter, Jane

When I remember Nana, I do so with a fond heart and a smile on my face. I’m a very, very lucky person to be Lillian’s granddaughter.

I remember with fondness the love for her family, each and every one of us.

I remember how she saved her catalogues all winter so that we could play doll cut-outs on her front porch in the summer.
I remember picking raspberries and taking them straight to Nana’s where she turned them into delicious pies and tarts.

I remember playing game after game of gin rummy with Nana in her back porch.

I remember Nana’s traffic reports.

I remember Nana’s little shanty.

I remember driving to the cottage and stopping to see Nana on the way. She’d always be ready with loads of chelsea buns and oatmeal cookies. Always.

I remember Nana reciting her poetry.

I remember the mountains of egg salad sandwiches she made for my lunch.

I remember her love for her little village. She would always say, “You won’t find anywhere nicer on the French Riviera.”

I remember Nana always trying to sneak money into my purse or pockets for a treat.

I remember she didn’t like spiders, either.

I remember Nana and I travelled by train together, first out west and then down east. Nana wanted to see it all and do it all. She and I shared many a dessert.

I remember Nana reciting “How to Cook a Husband” to me at wedding showers and my wedding.

I remember how she never liked to go anywhere empty-handed, and she never did.

I remember Nana sitting outside watching the comings and goings on Main Street.

I remember how Nana listened to my many stories. She may have been hearing impaired, but she really knew how to listen.

I remember how Nana knew my friends and my friends knew Nana. They too, thought she was very special.

I remember Nana reciting her poem about twins to me when our twins were born. The last time she recited it perfectly, from start to finish, word for word from her hospital bed.

I remember a loving and very special Nana.
I asked the great-grandchildren what they remember and this is what they said:

She made yummy chelsea buns.
She had a hearing telephone on her ear.
We watched funny shows together.
She always sang nursery rhymes to me and we clapped and laughed.
She always wore all those necklaces and there was a picture of me in one.
She was proud of my hockey. She liked hockey.
She liked to pretend she was 103.
She liked to dress up.
We blew out the birthday candles together.
Whenever her hair was messy she said she looked as if she'd been out in a hurricane.
Her TV was on all the time. Her light was, too.
Once we spun around and around and we laughed and laughed together.
She loved me.

We will always remember Nana with love in our hearts. Thank you, Nana, for sharing with us - your thoughtfulness, your poetry, your generosity, your chelsea buns, your interest in everyone and everything, and most of all, your love.
We'll miss you, Nana.

Memories of Nana
from her grandson, Scott

I can so vividly remember those childhood summer days. The air was filled with that unmistakable, sweet smell of chelsea buns baking in the oven. The air was also filled with a half dozen or so kids all jockeying for the best position as those creamy, doughy, brown sugar laced, steaming hot marvels came out of the oven. The back porch, only open from spring to fall, would become an absolute chaotic, but organized, feeding frenzy, as only those with athletic ability, long reach, poor table manners and skillful buttering techniques would have an opportunity for a second bun.

I remember the time we all went to Disneyland. I thought it was so cool that my Nana was interested in Mickey Mouse, and was willing to trek all over the theme park in eighty degree weather on a day that turned out to be an attendance record. Nana still spoke about that day last year as she said, “Finding that twenty dollars in the washroom was a thrill, but you know, dear, they really should have called that place Dizzyland.”

Carrying on conversations about the weather, the NHL, and how the teams were doing were topics about which Nana seemed to be well-informed, never totally pleased, but always fun. She was always interested in how business was going and most often offered some sage advice.
Her ability to tell a story with such detail and expression always amazed me, and her way with a song... , I can honestly say that for a while that was the only thing that would make our son sit still for longer than a minute.
I’m really going to miss our mutual birthday parties; she always humoured us as the birthday cake came out and the festive song was finished, said she couldn’t believe we remembered, and then more words, “Just a small piece, dear.”

We will sadly miss Nana from our gatherings in the future, but we are very grateful for memories we share.

The Teddy Bear Adoption Party
- a celebration of love for Nana,

It was the kind of glorious summer day that Nana had loved. The weather was beautiful, the air was festive, and many members of her family were together. Five great-granddaughters and their mothers gathered at Pat and David’s cottage in response to an enticing invitation from Pat and Lauren. In party attire and jewellery, the guests arrived to honour Nana’s memory in a very special way.

Pat had taken the fur coat in which Nana had always felt like a queen, and with magic hands and unsurpassed skill, had lovingly created five magnificent teddy bears. Each one was unique with its own facial expression and coloured ribbon. They waited impatiently on the cabinet to be adopted by the excited girls. Then, with eager anticipation, each great-granddaughter had a turn to choose her coveted bear. From the oldest to the youngest, they came forward to make the selection - “a little bit of Nana” - for posterity.

As the party continued, it became evident that the preparations had been flawless. The beautifully decorated table was laden with Nana’s favourite fancy sandwiches, fruit and vegetable trays, and even a re-creation of Nana’s famous chelsea buns. The tea was served Nana-style in fine china cups. Surrounding the food and lovely floral arrangement were framed copies of Nana’s poems, pictures, and her life story. The two oldest girls, Lauren and Ashleigh, read Nana’s poems. Kristen, the fourth in line, at five years of age, read the poem about twins. Kimberly chose the bear with the yellow ribbon. Christina chose the polka dot pink.

It was a perfect celebration of the unconditional love that Nana and her family felt for each other. It was not only a day of remembrance but a day to remember!

It was a day of magnificent glory!

The Life and Times of Lillian

“Don’t worry this true story has a happy ending. Lillian was my mother!”- Fran Marshall.

Lillian is one of several children of Austrian immigrants living in New York City in the early 1900s. When Lillian is three her mother dies. Her father takes the children to Canada and leaves them in an orphanage.

Follow Lillian’s life through sixteen cliff hanging units. Everyone enjoys this heroic story. Students identify with Lillian’s strong spirit and her triumph over adversity. Her story echoes their own struggle to settle in a new country.

Comments from teachers and learners across Canada.

“Lillian’s story resulted in more spontaneous discussion and writing than any reader I have used.”

“Attendance was perfect on the days the class knew we were studying one of the Lillian episodes.”

“A moving story, filled with suspense - a genuine gold mine for all ESL and LBS teachers.”

“The related activities that follow each episode were extremely valuable for my learners.”

“The lesson units worked perfectly because of the high interest level, the vocabulary usage, the excellent variety of multiskill exercises.”

“My classes eagerly await the sequel to this wonderful ESL resource.”

“Hurray for Lillian! Everyone applauded her indomitable spirit. Thank you, Fran, for sharing this beautiful story with us.”
